It is the difference between a happy life and a miserable life to most people who have grown up walking there with their fathers, mothers, children. It is where they learned about wildlife and plants and trees. It is where they had jam butties and flasks of tea with their family and where treasured memories are stored within the very fabric of the land. To the developers, the land is just a meaningless money making opportunity but to the residents of the local communities it is their escape, their daily walk and chance to be outside with the wild flowers and the ancient trees, to watch the moths and butterflies and restore their mental health. A few trees planted along an island of grass among a housing estate does not make it alright to destroy the habitat for deer, bats, badgers, foxes, squirrels, moths, | bees, butterflies and to take away precious oxygen that is so vitally important for this earth and for the human race. Find derelict housing estates instead, use abandoned factory sites before decimating the lives of local communities by adding noise, traffic, pollution and houses on their beloved green belt that is used and loved by so many. It is more than just waste land, it is our reason to get up and get dressed each day, it is our memories, it is our childhood, it is our happy place.
